SYMBOLS OF SASKATCHEWAN

In August, 1906, almost one year after the establishment of the Province of Saskatchewan, an official Coat of Arms was assigned by Royal Warrant.

Used exclusively by the Government of Saskatchewan, the Coat of Arms is composed of a red lion on a horizontal band of gold, occupying the upper one-third of the design. Beneath it, three golden sheaves rest on a green background. The colors are important. Red suggests the fires that swept the prairies in the early days. Green represents luxuriant grasses, once the grazing ground for herds of plains buffalo. Gold symbolizes fields of ripening wheat.

Two other representative emblems have been adopted by our province. In 1941, an act was passed, naming "the flower known botanically as lilium philadelphicum andinum," — popularly known as the prairie lily — as Saskatchewan's floral emblem.

The prairie sharp-tailed grouse is a familiar sight in many areas of Saskatchewan. In plentiful supply, and much sought after by hunters, the sharp-tailed grouse became a provincial emblem in 1945.
